

PALESTINIAN CHILDREN UNDER ATTACK: #FreeAhedTamimi and all Child Detainees

Ahed Tamimi, 16, a Palestinian girl from the village of Nabi Saleh near Ramallah in occupied Palestine, has been detained by Israeli occupation forces since December 19, 2017. After her arrest, her mother, Nariman Tamimi, was called to the police station - and then seized herself by occupation forces. Ahed's cousin Nour, 21, and an activist in her own right, was also seized on December 20. Ahed and her family have been arrested solely for their commitment to preserving and protecting their village's land in the face of ongoing settlement construction, violent invasions and raids, land confiscation, mass arrests and other attacks on their village.

Most recently, Ahed and her mother were seized after Ahed confronted an occupation soldier who shot her 14-year-old cousin Mohammed in the head with a rubber-coated metal bullet; young Mohammed Tamimi is currently hospitalized in critical condition. Bassem, Ahed's father, has been detained at least 11 times by Israeli authorities and spent over three years in administrative detention - imprisonment without charge or trial - recognized as an Amnesty International prisoner of conscience.

Palestinian Child Prisoners:

Ahed Tamimi is not alone; indeed, she is one of over 300 Palestinian child prisoners currently imprisoned by the Israeli occupation. Every year, over 700 Palestinian children face military trials and military imprisonment. Palestinian children are subject to torture and abuse under interrogation, arbitrary military trials, denial of their right to education, physical and psychological violence and imprisonment without charge or trial on a regular basis. Abdul-Khalik Burnat, 17, is another youth involved in land defense seized on December 10 by occupation forces.

Like Palestinian adults, Palestinian children are also subject to military trials with a 99.74% conviction rate as well as imprisonment without charge or trial under administrative detention. There are currently over 450 Palestinians jailed under administrative detention orders, which have included dozens of minors in the past few years.

“We have no choice but to resist. But because we resist, we pay the price.” - Bassem Tamimi

The village of Nabi Saleh, the home of Ahed, Bassem, Nariman and the Tamimi family, is home to 600 Palestinians. An agricultural village near Ramallah, Nabi Saleh has been home to weekly protests organized by Palestinian villagers - and supported by international activists - seeking to defend their land.

The illegal Zionist settlement of Halamish and its armed settlers have repeatedly attacked the village and have even confiscated its well and water spring; the village itself has faced continuous land confiscation and home demolitions at the hands of the Israeli occupation military. The settlement receives 24/7 water service, while the village of Nabi Saleh has only 12 hours of running water each week.

The village has been raided and attacked repeatedly and its residents assaulted with tear gas and rubber-coated metal bullets - including the one shot at Mohammed Tamimi, 14, who is now in the hospital in critical condition. Dozens of villagers have been arrested and even imprisoned by military courts for seeking to protect their ancestral agricultural lands from confiscation and destruction.
